PREFACE

The tradition of lexicography in Hindi-Urdu goes back some two centuries, but in most of the work undertaken in this field before the present century it was the Urdu aspect of Hindi-Urdu, with its extensive Persian and Arabic vocabulary, that was stressed. The monumental Hindī śabd-sāgar (1929) was the first major dictionary in the field of Hindi-Urdu to reflect the new circumstances of use of Hindi in the twentieth century. During this period Hindi has developed dramatically in scope, status, and literary versatility and has become effectively standardised as a language of public life, with corresponding effects upon its lexicon. Several successful monolingual and bilingual dictionaries of the modern language have been based upon the Hindī śabd-sāgar during recent decades. Yet the monolingual Hindī śabd-sāgar itself drew on its predecessors. One of these, J. T. Platts's Dictionary of Urdu, Classical Hindī and English (1884), has continued to be regarded by speakers of English as a valuable complement to it for the study of both modern and early Hindi. The organisation of Platts's work as an Urdu dictionary has limited its accessibility to students of Hindi, however, while the datedness of its lexical record, style of presentation, and treatment of etymology has made production of a new Hindi-English dictionary of comparable scale desirable for some time. The present work is an attempt to meet that need. There was good reason to make an editing of Platts's dictionary (as proposed by Oxford University Press, its publisher) the first stage in producing such a work, but clearly the task would go far beyond this, and would involve not only a complete revision of Platts's material but also collation of the Hindī śabd-sāgar and reference to other modern lexicographical materials, together with collection of new material from Hindi literary texts and other printed sources.

The chief requirement in a modern dictionary of Hindi was without doubt a treatment of the spoken and written language of the twentieth century in which the broad standard of urban usage was emphasised. Many words and expressions falling outside that standard which were recorded in the late nineteenth century also deserved inclusion, however, being still current in north India. It seemed desirable to retain, and to supplement, Platts's treatment of the vocabulary of early Hindi literature, and to retain some nineteenth century material illustrating the early development of the modern language. Items belonging to the more literary ranges of Urdu in prose and poetry might, however, in many cases be excluded from a dictionary of Hindi.

The work was planned in 1971 and I began to collect materials in that year. Between 1972 and 1975 Dr S. K. Mathur of Agra read through and commented on the text of Platts's dictionary and a part of the text of the Mānak hindī koś (1962) from the viewpoint of a speaker of the modern standardised language. He also compiled a file of words from modern newspapers and journals. During the years 1975-80 and 1984-92 I produced the present text. This involved reconsidering Platts's entire materials, revising and reorganising each entry to be retained, collating other lexicographical materials, reading Hindi sources, and adding in consequence many new entries. I was assisted in the earlier stages of the work by Dr Mathur's comments on standardised usage, and later, in considering regional usage, by those of Dr T. N. Sharma of Ambikapur, Madhya Pradesh (my colleague from 1976 to 1980) and Dr S. M. Pandey of Ballia. Many modern Hindi words and expressions were reconsidered during the years 1987-92 by Dr S. N. Srivastava, of Banaras, and myself. Dr Srivastava, my colleague from 1980 to the present, gave generously of his time to comment on innumerable points of detail that arose during this period. He also read through and commented on the text of the dictionary before its publication and made various suggestions for its improvement. Various of the etymologies proposed have benefited from comments by Professor K. R. Norman.

By the time the work was nearing completion, production by computer combining roman and Devanāgarī scripts had become feasible. Dr K. E. Bryant of the University of British Columbia designed the Devanāgarī font; it was redrawn for typesetting this dictionary by Bruno Maag. The processing and sorting of the materials and their preparation for final production were carried out by Dr J. L. Dawson, Dr D. R. de Lacey, and their colleagues of the Literary and Linguistic Computing Centre of Cambridge University. The Centre's support for the project was indispensable in all these stages of the work, and its members' constant assistance from 1984 onwards is greatly appreciated. Dr J. D. Smith assisted the Centre in adapting the font for use with the Cambridge University computer. I would like to thank the British Academy for an award made in 1985 which covered most of the costs of inputting the materials to the computer. Most of this work was done by E. McGregor and by S. K. Y. Zangmo.

I would like to record my gratitude to my above-mentioned former and present colleagues for the help which I have received in preparing this dictionary, as well as to other persons who have given me assistance in various ways. For the shortcomings that will undoubtedly be found in the work I am of course responsible. My warmest thanks are due to my wife Elaine, for her generous support and help, as well as for her patience and encouragement, without all of which this work might not have reached completion.

INTRODUCTION

The term 'modern Hindi' denotes a language written in the Devanāgarī script and relatively standardised in its written form (but less so in pronunciation and spoken usage) which is in general use today in most of north and central India. Modern Hindi co-exists in this region with regional forms of speech more or less closely cognate to it and with many local dialects, as well as with Urdu, a complementary style of language: one potentially identical with modern Hindi at the spoken level while expressing a distinctively Persian cultural orientation at more literary levels. Urdu, an earlier specialisation than Hindi of a mixed speech of the Delhi area which had gained currency as a lingua franca, had arisen broadly because of an increasing artificiality in the use of Persian for literary and other formal purposes in Indo-Muslim circles during the later Mughal period. Modern Hindi by contrast arose in the nineteenth century to meet a different need: that for a linguistic vehicle which should allow communication with, and among, a wider section of the north Indian population than had been possible in practice in the case of Urdu. The use of an Indian script, and of a smaller component of Persian and Arabic vocabulary than was often used in the Urdu of the time, were essential prerequisites to this end. There was a correspondingly increased use of words of Indian origin in the new style, and in particular of Sanskrit words.

The modern Hindi style gained currency in the period up to the 1860s above all because it was a medium of education and instruction. The rise of a modern sense of Indian identity in north India from the 1860s onwards became the mainspring of an accelerating increase in the use of Hindi in the later nineteenth century. The new style won increasing official recognition first in parts of north and central India where Urdu was less firmly established and finally, by 1900, in the United Provinces (now Uttar Pradesh). It had by this time become a well established vehicle for journalism and belles lettres. The factors responsible for its rise continued to operate during the following decades, and this meant that its further development in terms both of numbers of users and range of functions was assured. By contrast the development of Urdu suffered some retardation in the twentieth century. The potential of Hindi as a favoured form of Hindi-Urdu, and the great geographical range of Hindi-Urdu across the sub-continent and indeed beyond (which makes this language probably the world's third in terms of number of users) brought it about that 'Hindi in the Devanagari script' was recognised in 1947 as the official language of India. The main factors influencing the further development of Hindi were to be, first as before, the rate of spread of education and literacy, and secondly the relationships of competition and contact existing between Hindi and English and between Hindi and the Indian regional languages.

The lexicon of Hindi comprises in historical terms a body of words which has evolved from Old and Middle Indo-Aryan linguistic forms (and from non-Indo-Aryan forms assimilated at an early period into Indo-Aryan) together with a large accretion of words borrowed at later periods from different sources. Of the words which have evolved organically from OIA and MIA, many are everywhere in use today among speakers of the standardised language. Others, however, are restricted in their currency to the regional and local varieties of Hindi which are the mother tongues of a large proportion of Hindi speakers. Regional and local words are always liable to intrude into the standardised language as used locally, and also as used by writers in conveying local atmosphere or for other stylistic purposes. Of the loanwords, many of Persian or Arabic origin, and some of Turkish origin, are fully acclimatised in everyday usage, especially in urban usage. Other readily distinguishable groups of loanwords are those borrowed from Sanskrit, or based on Sanskrit forms, and those borrowed from English and other European languages.

Loanwords of Sanskrit origin have been used in north Indian vernacular speech and also in vernacular poetry over many centuries. Many became acclimatised in early Hindi dialect poetry, and we may presume these to have been widely known. Their currency in dialect poetry provided an important typological precedent for the later Sanskrit loanwords and other Sanskritic formations of modern Hindi and was crucial in aiding the assimilation of many of these, both into literary style and formal usage, and also into more everyday usage. The latter words and formations have tended to be pronounced in ways more conformable to their spellings than had been the case with their predecessors in dialect poetry: a tendency owing something to the desire to express a sense of modern cultural identity lexically, in terms of age-old values. Such words can show changes of meaning as compared to the central meaning or meanings they or their constituent parts originally had as Sanskrit words. The immediate source for a number was not Sanskrit itself, but the Sanskritised Bengali of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries; some words borrowed via this route have yielded ground today to alternatives drawn more directly from Sanskrit. Other Sanskrit loanwords and coinages of modern Hindi had limited success from the outset, however, and are today obsolete; while some found in the contemporary written language are clearly experimental, and likely in many cases to prove ephemeral. Various Sanskritic loanwords and expressions are acclimatised chiefly in poetry of more formal style.

Very different in kind from the above loanwords are the neologisms of the modern language. These words are either, again, loanwords from Sanskrit or coinages based on Sanskrit words. Many such coinages can be seen to be lexical calques on English words of Latin or Greek origin. Acclimatisation of words of this kind was impeded from the outset by several facts. First, knowledge of the things or concepts they refer to often spread slowly, and in the more technical fields has so far generally remained restricted to small sections of the Hindi-speaking population. In these quarters, moreover, the English words in question have remained generally more familiar than the new coinages. Components of the coinages were, again, sometimes used in ways which bore little relationship to their main senses or areas of meaning as Sanskrit words; and their Sanskritic origins could seem awkwardly at variance with a modern context of use. The above factors have worked against ready acceptance of the neologisms (especially those in more technical fields) that have been proposed in numbers both by lexicographers and by Indian Government agencies, as well as introduced by writers and journalists on an ad hoc basis. A further factor working against wide acceptance of neologisms has been that there has been no agreement on the forms to be used, or on their exact senses, so that competing expressions have sometimes gained a confusing, nominal currency. It was always unlikely given the importance of English in India throughout the years from c.1800, and the cultural and linguistic distance at which modern India stands from its Sanskritic past, that the lexical modernisation of Hindi could have proceeded solely via a process of coining Sanskritic neologisms. In the case of most scientific and technical terms it seems that the English words themselves are now being successfully acclimatised; although in other spheres (such as those of law and non-technical journalism) many coinages have established themselves in the written language and appear in various cases to be gaining currency in the spoken.

The different sections of the Hindi vocabulary described in the above paragraphs have been treated in this dictionary as follows. Of the words of Old and Middle Indo-Aryan derivation and the acclimatised loanwords of Persian, Arabic, and Turkish origin, which together form the bedrock of the later language, a relatively comprehensive record has been aimed at, except in the case of words restricted to regional and local varieties of Hindi. These are represented more selectively. Regional words listed by Platts or in the Hindī śabd-sāgar and for which some contemporary verification has been found have generally been included, together with a selection of regional usages found in modern literature and some regional items confirmed for earlier periods of the modern language. To avoid ambiguity in a dictionary intended to display both the vocabulary of the modern standardised language and other aspects of the Hindi word-stock, regional words and other words not current in the contemporary standardised language are marked with distinguishing labels. Of the Sanskrit loanwords and Sanskritic formations found in early and modern Hindi literature and in modern usage more generally, a generous representation has been given. Neologisms of the modern language are represented more selectively, for the reasons indicated above.

Many English words are used naturally in everyday contexts by Hindi speakers not educated in English and are indisputably part of the modern Hindi lexicon, e.g. aspatāl 'hospital', akṭūbar 'October', reḍiyo 'radio', grāmophon 'gramophone'. The pronunciation of these words is often Indianised appreciably, especially in the case of words long current in Hindi, such as the first two examples. English loanwords which are substantially Indianised in pronunciation (such as aspatāl) have frequently been included in this dictionary as Hindi words in their own right; but while words of the type of reḍiyo (everyday words of modern life borrowed more recently, but known to all) are no less acclimatised, their claims to inclusion in a bilingual dictionary of Hindi to English did not seem strong. The same applied to the large class of technical and scientific terms and words dealing with less familiar spheres of modern life, despite the crucial importance of these words in modern usage.

Finally, Hindi contains loanwords from a number of other languages than those referred to above. A few words ultimately of Greek or Latin origin have made their way into the language via Persian and Arabic. Some common Hindi words are derived from Portuguese. There are some isolated borrowings from other European languages than English and Portuguese, and a few from Malay/Indonesian and Chinese. Other words have been acquired by Hindi speakers from contact with particular Indian languages or regions, especially in more modern times.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

Some information about the structure and presentation of the dictionary entries is provided below.

STRUCTURE OF ENTRIES

Entries may contain up to twelve parts, in the following order: 1. Headword. 2. Transliteration. 3. Derivation. 4. Grammatical designation. 5. Phonemic transcription. 6. Subject label. 7. Linguistic label. 8. Stylistic label. 9. Gloss. 10. Examples of use. 11. Compound words containing the headword. 12. Run-on forms.

1. Headword (the word to be glossed), in Devanāgarī script. The structure of the language favours use of compound words built up on single base units. Compound words are usually not entered individually as headwords but under the base word on which they are formed, e.g. jal-kriyā 'offering of water' is entered under jal 'water', and similarly many other compounds formed on this base. This procedure is normally followed in the case of compounds consisting of words borrowed from Sanskrit. Compounds formed on words of other origin have in various cases been entered as headwords, however, rather than under their first members. If the user of the dictionary fails to find a given word, which appears to be a compound, in the entry for its apparent first member, he or she should therefore look for it as a headword before concluding that it has not been included.

Some items which are not independent lexical units of the language have been entered as headwords, viz. Hindi prefixes, various Hindi suffixes, various Sanskrit, Persian, and Arabic prefixes, compounding forms (such as du-, dvi- 'two, bi-') and some formative elements (such as -d 'giving', -prad 'productive of', -pūrvak '-ly', -dār '-having') which occur only finally in compounds. Citation of these items as headwords should allow identification of the meanings of many compound words of Sanskritic origin which have not been included in the dictionary; as well as the meanings of many Hindi words and some Urdu words.

2. Transliteration of the headword, in roman script. The transliteration is an adaptation of that used for Sanskrit (which has been often used, with modifications, for Hindi). Broadly speaking it will serve as a guide to the pronunciation of the headword in educated modern usage. The 'inherent' Sanskritic vowel /ə/ (which is weakened by Hindi speakers in many phonetic contexts, and dropped in others) is represented where weakened by ā, and where dropped is unrepresented. Prefixes and a few prefixed elements are identified by the use of hyphens, e.g. pari-śram, vy-avā-hār, be-kār, lā-javāb; and sandhi junctions by the use of circumflex accents, e.g. prōtsāhan.

3. Derivation, or Linguistic connection, of the headword, in square brackets. Derivational processes are indicated as follows:

(a) Hindi tadbhava words (words which have evolved organically from OIA or MIA) are referred to OIA source-words or constructs (unlabelled) where possible; MIA forms (labelled Pa. or Pk.) are frequently added to the latter in clarification, e.g. bāt [vārtā-]; usīsā [**ut-śīṣa*- : Pa. ussisaka-]; pailā [patrala-, Pk. patuala-].<sup>1</sup> Most of the source-words and constructs cited are to be found in R. L. Turner's Comparative Dictionary of the Indo-Aryan Languages.

(b) For tatsama loanwords (words borrowed from Sanskrit, or formed on Sanskrit structural models, which show minimal phonetic adjustment to Hindi phonological patterns) the source is denoted 'S.', e.g. mātsaryā [S.].

(c) For loanwords borrowed from OIA which show appreciable adaptation (chiefly phonetic adaptation) as compared to corresponding Sanskrit forms, derivations are prefixed by the abbreviation 'ad.', e.g. pragaṭ [ad. prakaṣa-]; jantar [ad. yantra-].

(d) For loanwords of Persian or Arabic origin the source form is cited. Where Arabic words show a modified Persian form, that form is indicated;

similarly in most cases where Arabic and Persian words acquire suffixes in passing to Hindi, e.g. namak [P. namak]; śikāyat [A. śikāya: P. śikāyat];<sup>2</sup> mātamī [A. ma'tam + P. -ī]; nek [P. nek].<sup>3</sup>

(e) Where a headword is formed by extension from an Indian word (whether by prefixation, infixation or suffixation)<sup>4</sup> or shows a change of grammatical function, the abbreviation 'cf.' is used with its referend, e.g. angaṇit [cf. gaṇita-]; asūjh [cf. H. sūjh]; sunvānā [cf. H. sunnā]; laṛakpan [cf. H. laṛkā]; māt-, vb. [cf. matta-].

(f) Where re-formation of a word has taken place (as in folk etymologies) the abbreviation 'f.' is sometimes used, e.g. bacnāg [f. vatsanābha-]; kaṛābīn [f. P. qarābīn: ← F].

4. Grammatical designation. The usual abbreviations are employed. Gender variation in nouns is marked, e.g. qalam, f. m. (primarily feminine); āśnā, m., f. (of varying gender according to sex of referend).

5. Phonemic transcription. A broad transcription is given in some cases where a common pronunciation of the headword varies unpredictably from what is suggested by its spelling, e.g. vah var. /vōh/; guṇ var. /gūṭ/.

6. Subject label, denoting a particular field of knowledge, e.g. hort., bot., gram.

7. Linguistic label, referring the headword to a particular variety of language. Use of a particular label does not mean that another, or others, may not also apply. The following are used:

U. words belonging to Urdu rather than to Hindi usage
reg. regional words not part of normal educated usage in the standardised language.

This abbreviation may be followed by any of the designations

E. current in or recorded from the eastern Hindi area;
W. current in or recorded from the western Hindi area;
Raj. current in or recorded from Rajasthan;
N., or Panj. current in or recorded from the Haryana-Panjab region

E.H. words recorded in early Hindi literature

Brbh. words recorded in early Hindi (Brajbhāṣā) literature

Av. words recorded in early Hindi (Avadhī) literature

S.H. words recorded in early Hindi poetry of southern (Deccan) origin.<sup>5</sup>

8. Stylistic label, referring the headword to a particular stylistic register. The following are used:

arch.	archaic
colloq.	colloquial
euphem.	euphemistic
iron.	ironic
joc.	jocular
obs.	obsolete
pej.	pejorative
pronun. var.	pronunciation variant*
sl.	slang
vulg.	vulgar.

9. Gloss, or numbered glosses, illustrating the main sense(s) of the headword. A primary gloss may be followed by secondary glosses giving related senses, or translation equivalents, of the headword. Secondary glosses are divided from the primary gloss and from one another by semicolons.

Order of numbered glosses. Prominent meanings of headwords are usually entered before less prominent meanings. In cases where this has not been done, prominent meanings are marked with an asterisk. These cases are most usually loanwords where the order of glosses points to a historical development of meaning. Technical senses of loanwords generally follow non-technical senses.

Some examples of use are introduced to clarify the sense of numbered glosses, but most material illustrating use of a given headword is placed in the separate section of entries concerned with usage.

Glosses are separated from any following section of an entry by the divider —.

10. Examples of use, with translation. These illustrate use of headwords (denoted by ~) in both more straightforward, and more idiomatic or figurative contexts. Where a word enters into many idiomatic expressions a wide range of these (sometimes including expressions influenced by regional usage) is given.

Examples of use are separated from any following section of an entry by the divider —

11. Compound words containing the headword. As indicated above compound words have generally been entered under their first members to save space. A wide range of compound words has been included in the dictionary, but many compounds the meanings of which can be inferred from their members have been excluded. Derivatives of compound words are indicated by citing the suffixes concerned following the words, e.g. the form paramārthī is indicated by °ī following paramārtha.<sup>7</sup> Compound words are hyphenated insofar as the practice of careful users of Hindi appears to allow. Co-ordinative (dvandva) compounds are regularly hyphenated; determinative (tasपुरी and karmadhāraya) compounds have sometimes been hyphenated, but not if one member occurs in a phonetically shortened form (e.g. bhikhmaṅgā, ghuṣavār, jalad); possessive (bahuvrīhi) compounds are unhyphenated (e.g. pragatiśīl, dumanzilā, haṁsmukh). Quasi-compounds (e.g. ās-pās, garbar-śarbar) are hyphenated.

* Some of the variants indicated in this way are common, but others are hardly used by educated speakers.

Words formed with certain suffixes having clearly defined lexical senses (e.g. -may 'consisting of', -vān 'possessing', -pūrvak 'in the manner of, -ly') are treated as compounds. Words formed with suffixes such as -tā (abstract noun formant) are treated as headwords.

Supplementary information about the derivation of compounds is often provided, e.g. akar-bāī [-vāta-, or -vāyu-]; astarkārī [P. -kārī]; iktarfā [cf. A. taraf]; dhūp-snān [Engl. sunbathing].

Compound words are separated from any following section of an entry by the divider —.

12. Run-on forms. These comprise grammatical derivatives of headwords, such as participial forms of verbs with their derivatives, and some reduplicative formations not treated as compounds, e.g. mārā, adj.; mārā-mārī, f.; dinbadin, adv.; raṅgiraṅgā, adj.

TYPOGRAPHICAL CONVENTIONS

1. Brackets are used

(a) to clarify contexts of use, e.g. mārmā, to blunt (a blade, an edge); to round off (a corner, &c.); to assail (as hunger, emotion, or perplexity; or as a vice); apnā karmā, to make (a person or thing) one's own;

(b) to indicate cases where addition or deletion of a term has little bearing on the effective sense of an expression, e.g. (phik) samay par, punctually;

(c) to indicate the nature of the constructions into which words enter. In many of these cases, the relevant English and Hindi words are bracketed together, e.g. bolnā, to speak (to, with, se); mīlnā, to accrue (to, ko); kośīś karmā, to try (to, kī).

2. Hyphens are used, in headwords,

(a) with verb stems, to indicate that a given stem is a regional one not used in the modern standardised language, e.g. māt-;

(b) with stems of masculine nouns and of adjectives recorded from

<sup>7</sup> Suffixes consisting of vowels or containing an initial vowel are to be understood as conjoined with loss of stem final -a: वरवार्य + °ई = वरवारी; वृषवर्ध + °न = वृषवर्धन.

Brajbhāṣa of which the direct case singular ending is unverified (e.g. alsaumh-);

(c) in some items of reduplicative form, e.g. car-car.

3. Colons are used

(a) occasionally to mark off an explanatory word or phrase from following 'numbered glosses, e.g. a-seṣ, without remainder: 1. complete, entire. 2. without end, vast;

(b) following a gloss to a headword which occurs only in compound words (examples of which follow after the divider —).

TREATMENT OF VARIANT SPELLINGS, AND CERTAIN REGIONAL FORMS

1. Spellings such as गङ्गा, पञ्जा, पञ्जा, हिन्दी and लम्बा (in which nasal consonants preceding plosives are represented explicitly in conjunct characters) are discarded in favour of their commoner equivalents गंगा, पंजा, पंजा, हिंदी and लंबा (in which anusvāra is used).

2. In other cases of variant spellings, where more than one spelling has general acceptance in modern Hindi the forms concerned are usually entered separately, e.g. दुकान and दुकान. Where common variant spellings involve use or non-use of conjunct characters, e.g. गर्म and गरम, अंतराष्ट्रीय and अंतरराष्ट्रीय, cross-references are made from the variant judged to have lesser standing in the spelling practice of educated users of modern Hindi to the other variant. Where spelling practice varies more at random (as in the use of virāma, in certain vowel sequences, in some markings of nasality, in the writing of some conjunct consonants and by metrical licence in poetry) the variations concerned are usually not indicated. This also applies to various spellings which reflect less favoured pronunciations of received forms (e.g. शरीरिक् for शारीरिक्), or regional pronunciation tendencies (e.g. खाना for खाना, गरम- for गरम-, जलान- for जलाना, v.t.).

3. Spellings involving the use of subscript dots to denote sounds of Persian and Arabic (sometimes pronounced by Hindi speakers) have been preferred to those in which the dots are dispensed with, despite the fact that the latter type of spelling is today more common.

4. Many spellings found in the older language (and current today chiefly in less careful or less well-educated usage) reflect adaptations of pronunciation undergone by words borrowed from Sanskrit sources (e.g. अंतर alongside अंतर). Most such spellings are of readily recognisable types, especially use of अ for अ:	अंतर	=	अंतर

use of अ for अ:	अबीन	=	अबीन

use of न for णः	प्रवीन	=	प्रवीण
use of स for णः	सबद	=	शब्द
use of ञ for णः	लोज	=	लोष
use of छ (५छ) for णः	मंतरिच्छ	=	मंतरिष
use of C <sup>1</sup> aC <sup>2</sup> for C <sup>1</sup> C <sup>2</sup> :	घरम	=	घर्म <sup>१</sup>
use of पर- for प्रः	परालब्ध	=	प्रारब्ध.

Examples of these spelling types have mostly not been entered in the dictionary. Some adaptive spellings more difficult to identify have been included, however, e.g. दुविषा, cross-referenced to द्विषा.

5. Spellings of the following types, that reflect regional or dialectal pronunciations, are often disregarded:

use of ए for ऐः	पेवंद	=	पैवंद
use of ओ for औः	ओसाना	=	औसाना
use of ओ for ओः	बरोठा	=	बरोठा
use of न for रः	परालब्ध	=	परारब्ध
use of र for णः	डार-	=	डालना
use of र for ङः	घोरी	=	घोड़ा

IDENTIFICATION OF CERTAIN DERIVATIVE FORMS

Sanskrit words or coinages containing the vrddhi (increased grade) vowels ā, ai, au have sometimes been omitted from the dictionary where their meanings can be readily inferred from related words containing the non-vrddhi vowels a, i, ī, e, u. Thus from the word caritra 'character' the meaning of cāritrik 'having to do with character' can be inferred; from anugat 'followed' that of ānugatya 'what follows, result'; from siktā 'sand, gravel' that of saikat 'sandy, gravelly'; from ekātma 'of one nature' that of aikātmya 'identity'; and from upanyāsa 'novel' that of aupanyāsika 'having to do with novels'; &c.

THE DEVANĀGARĪ SCRIPT: ORDER OF CHARACTERS

The order of characters of the Devanāgarī script (which reflects the sound values that they represent) is shown, together with the roman transliterations used for the characters, in the table below.

1. The vocalic sounds precede the consonants, starting with अः<sup>१</sup>

<sup>२</sup> Vowels to which the superscript signs anusvāra (dot) or candrabindu ('moon-and-dot') are attached, or which are followed by the sign visarga ('colon'), precede the same vowels written without any of these signs. Thus ई precedes ईः, ए precedes एः, द्वि precedes द्विः, and इ precedes इः.

अ a	आ ā	इ i	ई ī	उ u	ऊ ū	ऋ ṛ
ए e		ऐ ai		ओ o	औ au.

2. The consonants (क, ख . . . ह) follow:<sup>10</sup>

क ka	ख kha	ग ga	घ gha	ङ ṅa
च ca	छ cha	ज ja	झ jha	ञ ña
ट ṭa	ठ ṭha	ड ḍa <sup>11</sup>	ढ ḍha <sup>11</sup>	ण ṇa
त ta	थ tha	द da	ध dha	न na
प pa	फ pha	ब ba	भ bha	म ma
य ya	र ra	ल la	व va
श śa	ष ṣa	ह ha. <sup>11</sup>	स sa
